The film shows the first class of 50 men in Solano prison, who graduated from The Occupational Mentor Certification Program in 2009. In a dangerously overcrowded California State prison, 50 lifers seize a groundbreaking opportunity to become among the nation's first incarcerated Substance Abuse Counselors. 'The 50' chronicles how the first participants of the Occupational Mentor Program not only navigate their own deep-seated traumas but harness those experiences to emerge as society's most adept healers.

"That produced the best counselors in the country."

Tom Gorkman, former Options Recovery Services Executive Director

Hear from Occupational Mentor graduates in person who are miraculously impacting their communities. You will be inspired by the journeys of these extraordinary human beings. This is an intimate study on redemption.
